By Appointment

Street Scene, Cairo. Here we see set out for sale piles of the dry bread-cakes which are eaten by the Cairene native, a stall covered with sweet cakes and sticky sweet-meats, and fruit grown outside the city. There is fish in the basket on a woman's head, dates in the scarlet handkerchief of the white-robed Nubian, and under the cover of a stall hangs a bucket of water ready for the drinkers of sherbet.
